

Longitudinally Extensive Transverse Myelitis (LETM) secondary to SARS-CoV-2 infection – A recent reality in spinal cord injury rehabilitation

João Fonseca<sup>1</sup>, Alexandra Coelho<sup>2</sup>, Ana Lourenço<sup>3</sup>, César Pires<sup>4</sup>, and Paulo Margalho<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Centro Hospitalar e Universitário de Coimbra EPE

<sup>2</sup>Centro Hospitalar e Universitario de Coimbra EPE

<sup>3</sup>Centro de Medicina de Reabilitacao da Regiao Centro Rovisco Pais

<sup>4</sup>Centro de Medicina de Reabilitação da Região Centro Rovisco Pais

February 11, 2022

Abstract

Transverse myelitis can be a complication of SARS-CoV-2 infection. We report the case of transverse myelitis related to SARS-CoV-2 infection. Beyond the disease itself, neurological involvement affects functionality. In this situation, Physical and Rehabilitation Medicine plays a crucial role in managing patient rehabilitation.

Hosted file

Longitudinally Extensive Transverse Myelitis (LETM) related with SARS-CoV-2 infection -- A new reality : available at <https://authorea.com/users/460035/articles/556118-longitudinally-extensive-transverse-myelitis-letm-secondary-to-sars-cov-2-infection-a-recent-reality-in-spinal-cord-injury-rehabilitation>

